Hier noch ein Pressebericht:

Volkswagen's SUV is a five-door model built with a tight unibody structure. It's sleek in style, large in scale for the mid-size wagon class and provides a big cabin with seats for five and luxurious appointments. The Touareg employs VW's four-wheel-drive (4WD) traction device labeled 4XMotion, which provides uncanny stick-it-down traction for all wheels, plus optional locking rear differential and an air suspension. Engines contain six, eight or even ten cylinders. The base plant, a 3.2-liter V6 coupled to a six-speed automatic transaxle with Tiptronic clutchless shift mode, jumps up to 240 hp for 2005.

Optional is a 4.2-liter V8 worth 310 hp or a massive turbo-diesel 5.0-liter V10 that musters 310 hp with 553 lb-ft of torque to boost Touareg's towing capacity to 7,716 pounds. The Touareg V10 TDI also has a six-speed automatic transmission, electronic stabilization program and a device called Hill Descent and Climb Assist to keep wheels tethered to a steep grade. Improvements to Touareg in 2005 include self-dimming exterior mirrors, a full-size spare tire mounted at the rear, and new stand-alone options like a tire pressure monitoring system (TPMS), DVD-based navigation equipment and satellite radio service.
